Presented by Michael Smull

'Valuing People Now' tells us that Person Centred Approaches must become the 'norm' in services. What questions do we need to ask and what do we need to do to make this happen?

A culture is 'the way things are done around here', the collective values of a group of people, the relationships between those people, how they see the world and their own place in it.

We all create and re-create our culture every day through the words we use and the work that we do, through what we find unacceptable, and what we are prepared to tolerate, what we see as worth working for, giving us meaning and purpose so that it is worth devoting human energy and natural resources to achieving. The culture is larger than any single organisation. Our culture belongs to all of us, and we all have a role to play in applying our gifts and skills to changing it where it fails to meet the needs and aspirations of the people it is meant to serve.

What part do we play in moving the culture of our services away from system and service-centred thinking, and toward person centred thinking?
