The New Common Induction Standards and the LDAF Putting it into Practice

The North West Trainers Network exists in order to share best practice in development and training of the workforce in supports for people with learning difficulties and beyond. It provides an opportunity for people to come together on a quarterly basis to:

- Share information on latest developments and implementing guidance.
- Respond to the workforce development needs necessary to implement Valuing People, Our Health, Our Care our Say.
- Share and develop best practice in and staff development and training.
- Develop and implement innovative approaches to staff development and training.
- Provide peer support and problem solving opportunities.

The session will give people opportunities to:

- Find out about the new Common Induction Standards and how it interfaces with the Learning Disability Awards Framework and National Vocational Qualifications
- Find out about the new Induction Supplement and how it links with Developing Competences in Care Find out how various organisations from across the region are implementing these changes
- Work on addressing the implications for the delivery of staff training and development

This will be an interactive and participative event designed to actively support participants in developing and implementing their responses to the new requirements. For this session we will be joined by Janet Fairley. Janet is the Co-ordinator of TASS UK and is a member of the national LDAF development team. Janet has also been working on integrating the new induction standards link with the LDAF.

Please ensure that this information is passed on to anyone with an interest in staff development and training. This includes Training Officers and Commissioners, Workplace Assessors, Partnership Board members and operational staff and managers. We are also very keen to offer this network to self-advocates and family members who have become employers.
